Virginia Zoo unveils Norfolk mermaid statue makeover

NORFOLK, VA – The Virginia Zoo is unveiling the newly designed mermaid statue that greets guests as they enter the zoological park on October 10th at 2:30pm. Media and the public are welcome to join the Zoo with Executive Director, Greg Bockheim, Virginia Zoological Society Board Members, staff and local artist Bob Langston to view the new statue.

The tradition of Norfolk mermaid statues began in 1999 with Norfolk attorney Pete Decker to signify the City's symbol, the mermaid, on a "parade" throughout local businesses. These sculptures were designed and adopted by many businesses and community leaders to have them decorated by artists to showcase the variety of organizations that make up the City of Norfolk.

"We are excited to celebrate our community and our Zoo through the rejuvenation of this beloved symbol of Norfolk. I anticipate that with the beautiful and skillful work Bob has crafted, this may easily become the most photographed mermaid statue in our area," said Greg Bockheim, Executive Director of the Virginia Zoo.

The Virginia Zoo's mermaid statue was last refreshed in 2010, and it was due for a facelift after experiencing normal wear and tear over the years. The Zoo called-out for local artists to submit their design concepts and Bob Langston was selected by Zoo staff out of many Hampton Roads creatives to ultimately redesign the beloved mermaid statue. Bob is a full-time freelance artist from Virginia Beach with over 36 years of experience that primarily focuses on creating paintings. In his career he has designed one Norfolk mermaid and two Virginia Beach dolphins. Bob's full portfolio can be found here: <https://thebobzone.com/>

For this mermaid refresh, Bob found inspiration in the animals that call the Virginia Zoo home and the wild environments around them. A wide variety of animal species will be represented on this new statue and the welcoming sculpture will give guests a taste of what they are set to experience in the park.
